USE Basis

I think this course was really useful for me as a designer. It made me more aware of the ethical and historical relation with technology. So you have to accurately observe the user/society/enterprise to deliver a successful product. This user analysing aspect strongly agrees with my vision as a designer. In my opinion user interaction with the product is very important to discover if the user's actions corresponds with the designers intentions. Although this is very interesting I think the perspective of this course is interesting as well. The outcome of your product is really relevant in order to prevent nightmares among the potential customers. That is why I think this is useful to know in order to prevent outcome issues. I did not set any goal in the beginning of this course except for getting a good grade of course. I am applying all the experience which helped me pass other courses to prevent failing the final test.

Until now, my intermediate grades are not giving me uncertainties of getting a good grade, so that proves I am on the right way. For the next time I want to make more goals in order to get more achievements and to really know what I am doing with the activity. Right now, I think it is difficult to formulate points of learning, except for the learned theories. If I had set a goal related to my vision as a designer I think I had less problems with formulating the utility of doing this course. Afterwards I can always check how it relates with my vision, but it would have been more interesting to compare it to my first impression of the course. So that is what I especially going to focus on next time.
